

Free Photos You Can Use

Hi! I'm Manny M. Vioria of <http://www.OneNegosyo.com> (Tara, mag online business na tayo!) and <https://TrulyRichPinoy.com/tara/> (Tara, mag stock market na tayo!), and here are places where you can find photos to use in your blog posts and social media posts.

While these may be free, please take time to read the licensing terms. For example, photos with people or recognizable landmarks should not be used in a way that will make the person feel bad.

If you're planning to promote a business with the help of these photos, please ensure that the business you will promote is a business you'll be proud of.

Or better yet, use the photos to promote your own products.

The latest version of this document may be accessed at <http://freephotosyoucanuse.OneNegosyo.com>

As of January 28, 2018 here are the sites which offer free photos

<http://pixabay.com>

We use Pixabay often because the people photos look quite flattering. They have photos of people in front of a solid color background, and also in front of nature scenes and slice of life scenes. The photos of asians feels a bit limited, so we tend to use photos of less than ten stock photography models.

<http://pexels.com>

Some of the photos here are also available in Pixabay, although there are featured photos of people who aren't that heavily promoted in Pixabay.

Pexels has a Popular Photos section, which can help you gain a better idea of what kind of images catch the attention of a lot of people.

When you engage in social media marketing, choose a photo that catches the attention of people, so that they will take time to even look at your Attention-Getting Headline. The headline should motivate people to read the rest of your post, which encourages people to click on a link or take action (e.g., signup for your newsletter, leave a comment, LIKE your post).

<http://stocksnap.io>

The above photo was listed among the most downloaded photos in StockSnap. There are also links to Trending (if you're interested in newer photos that are rising in popularity), Most Views, and Most Favorited.

The key here is to find out what photos catch the attention of a lot of people.

Of course, there is a risk that if you use such photos in your social media marketing campaigns, your viewers might ignore those and silently say: "Yeah, I've seen that photo already before."

One thing you can try is to create your own images, based on what you think will make it popular.

For example, the image above we see a smartphone with the words Social Media near it. You can take a photo of your own phone, with the words "Social Media" handwritten on a notepad near the phone.

<http://foodiesfeed.com>

The site relies on advertising revenues, so they will request you to disable your Ad Blocker app. Downloading isn't as fast as the other sites (there's no easy Copy Image command), but if you're looking for great-looking images related to food, beverages, and eating out, the photos here are quite attractive!

<http://travelcoffeebook.com/>

Do you want scenes of nature? Do you and your readers look forward to travel scenes? Check out this site. It would be great if there were a Trending or Popular Photos section. Perhaps in the future?

<https://unsplash.com/>

This community aims to help promote various photographers, so although you're not required to post an attribution to the photographer of the image you use, you are encouraged to do so. There's a copy button that helps you easily cite the source. For example, Photo by Pineapple Supply Co. on Unsplash

<https://stockphotos.io/>

You can find photos arranged according to categories: Designs, Concepts, Tech, Lifestyle, Places, and Nature.

And there you have it, free photos from the web! May these help spark ideas in you, as you move upward in your online marketing career.

Are you looking an affiliate program that has a strong and reliable Payout Track Record?
Watch the 3 videos in <http://applynow.OneNegosyo.com> today.

Kind regards,

Manny M. Vioria

<http://www.OneNegosyo.com> – Tara, mag online business na tayo!

<https://TrulyRichPinoy.com/tara/> - Tara, mag stock market na tayo!